Q IV] Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow: (20)

Maya was a simple young woman who lived in the Tibetan settlement near Hubli in north Karnataka. She used to teach the Tibetan language to the children in the camp, so they would not forget their roots. She was smart and hard-working. My father was a doctor who was working in Hubli and he occasionally visited that settlement. Maya would often seek treatment from my father.

She became quite friendly with my family. Whenever she came to the hospital, she would pay us a visit too. My mother would invite her for a meal and we would spend some time chatting. In the beginning, we would be in awe of her and stare at her almost-white skin, dove eyes, her little flat nose and her two long, thin plaits. Slowly we accepted her as a friend and she graduated to become my knitting teacher.

Her visits comprised sessions of knitting, chatting and talking about her captivating life in the camp and back in her country for which she still yearned. Maya would describe her homeland to us with great affection, nostalgia and tears in her eyes. "Tibetans are simple people. We are all Buddhists but our Buddhism is of a different kind. There has been a lot of influence from India, particularly Bengal, on our country and religious practices. Our script resembles Bengali," Maya would often tell us whenever she met us.

Her words filled me with a sense of wonder about this exotic land called Tibet and I would pester her to tell me more about that country. She would say, "Ours is a unique country where religious heads have ruled for five hundred years. We believe in rebirth and that each Dalai Lama is an incarnation of the previous one. Historically, we have always respected India. There is a nice story about how Buddhism came to Tibet through India..."

Maya went on by saying, "Long ago there was a king in Tibet who was kidnapped by his enemies. They demanded a ransom of gold equal to the weight of the king. When the imprisoned king heard this, he somehow sent word to his son: "Don't waste any gold to get me back. Instead, spend that money to bring good learned Buddhist monks from India. With their help, open many schools and monasteries so that our people can live in peace and gain knowledge."

After the birth of her baby, Maya stopped coming to visit us and our meetings became less frequent. However, she succeeded in awakening within me a curiosity about Tibet and a great respect for Buddhism. I got a chance to visit Tibet and memories of Maya filled my mind. Among the places I wanted to see was a Buddha temple in Yarlung Valley that she had described to me. When I finally reached the valley, it was past midday.

There was a cold wind blowing though the sun was shining brightly. The Brahmaputra was flowing like a stream here, nothing like the raging torrent in Assam. Snow-capped mountains circled the valley and there was absolute silence all around. The monastery at Yarlung is supposed to be a famous pilgrimage spot, but I could see only a handful of people in the entire place. After seeing everything inside the monastery, I sat down on the steps and observed the serene beauty of the place with a heart filled with peace and gratitude.
